

FINANCE FOR NON-FINANCIAL MANAGERS

Course Code: 821212

Learn good financial judgment in order to be grounded in the tools of finance and deepen your financial decision-making skills.

Good financial judgment can deepen the decision-making skills of any business professional. Fluency with monetary figures helps you tie everyday operations to the financial success of your organization at a department and senior level. This dynamic 2-day training course will ground you in the functions and tools of finance. You will examine financial statements-including the balance sheet, income statement, cash flow statement, and statement of stockholders' equity-as guides to fiscal health. You will also identify what you want to gain from a budget and describe the steps of budgeting to meet these goals.

What You'll Learn

- Describe the importance and major elements of financial statements.
- Use balance sheets to determine the assets a company has at its disposal.
- Interpret income statements to identify corporate earnings, expenses, and profitability.
- Read cash flow and other statements to assess an organization's real-world financial situation.
- Select a budget type and method to fit the needs of a company.
- Prepare a responsible budget.

Who Needs to Attend

Participants in this course are managers from virtually every non-finance area, who work in multiple industries and geographies.
